Coming from a generation
use to everything being digital and "already done"
this at first felt "gimicky"
but after thought sets in I realize this is hopefully the closest to an experience
like this I will hopefully come to. PP1 should wake up.

Being a survivor of terrorism,
having suffered a massive explosion that took 600
lives, you are dispensable.
You are vulnerable in violence. Having to be caressed one too many times by violence, all I can say, you either embrace it or conquer it. I considered myself a

I grew up in Berlin, Germany (1926-1948) as 1/4 Jewish son of an artist/architect. These installations affected me deeply, powerfully.

I appreciate deeply the video interview.

I am so blessed to be alive & loved now ~~in~~ by many others... in my 90's.

An extremely eye opening experience. Nothing like I have ever seen before. "The Air Is Blue, The Air Is Dangerous" for example made one feel like they were living in the piece. Truly breath-taking, an amazing exhibition Powerful, moving. The pain we inflict on each other is so represented here. It is important to use art to show what is happening, and to affect people to want to make a change.

Thank you for showing this work.

Your artwork is real. Although there is no substitution for reality, I think you've created a world, shocking in the reality and the keen unreality of the horrors of the world. I often wonder how and why inhumanity can be so cruel & destructive. Your artwork pulled me into that uncontrollable questioning, a feeling that propels the humanity forward in me. Unbelievable.

Thought-provoking in all the right ways. You can feel in your skin the disparity that Shaw is trying to get across. I resonate with the people in the walls, trying to escape the ruins which we as a people have created.

Europe is no longer what it used to be. This is our new reality, perfectly picked in your art. I know, it is hard to still believe in the beauty of this world after such a traumatic experience, but we should never give up hope and see not only the darkness, but also the light.

As you walk deeper into these installations the terrifying mood builds.

It is a horrific reminder of how easily society can become that bit of nightmare we pretend it can't be.

I've never been so creeped out by an art exhibit and I mean that as the highest praise. The lighting, the empty spaces, Soul Snatcher

Possession ESPECIALLY

gave me the creeps, you can literally FEEL the depravity
Shaw is trying to express.

Defending Integrity... was my fav.

It's like walking through a memory; the lights, the props, the sounds, everything It's a moment lost in time. The entire space, you begin to see the people,
a pair of glasses left on a table, some shoes by a brother unknown.

Beautifully horrendous realities.

I was entranced by these works to silence to be able to observe and understand its messages. This art isn't afraid to shed light on cruel things this world has. We all live in it and are so ill informed or willing to speak up. Standing alone I could feel the heaviness form in my chest. This is eye opening at hope continues and is demonstrated

Nothing made me feel more than that. I felt in & out of control, until I saw the manipulation of the body. In that moment I genuinely had no words. It made me uncomfortable, a good one, I needed that discomfort.

Necessary that Artists struggle with the darker parts of human psyche & society. I was moved, shocked & drawn into this world he created. The anguish & terror of those events & others are part of the human experience - the images spoke eloquently of our existential dilemma.

When I walked into the room, I had only read the 1st part of the story. I knew it was about the aftermath of an explosion. As I walked in I felt the weight of the people's lives, that however long ago were lost. On top of this it reminded me of my elementary school's cafeteria. I couldn't walk in.
