The artwork makes you think.
It makes you have to come to the realization of what our lives have become, where we are going as a society. It brings forward all of the fears and thoughts that are in the back of everyone's minds. I haven't enjoyed a display like this in a VERY be willing to see it all.

Sometimes this means not you blunt your own humanity.

Throughout the gallery, I was constantly reminded of the fact that humanity is afflicted by a devotion to the baser things of life, which are all related to our lower nature. However, I was reminded of my own belief in the positive side of the human psyche, as reflected in Abraham Maslow's Self-actualization-movement

To those who were there, a sick, frightening image will re-emerge. To those of us who have lived through the present chaos, it is a grim reminder. And yet, despite all of this, I find myself hopeful that this exhibit may be a reminder to us all: if we are all capable of bad, we may be capable of good as well.

The work is powerful in its statements. The installation Mother in Air is Blue gave me chills; put me in a setting I have never experienced. The installations made me consider our country & my own myself. A very challenging exhibit.

Today in my travels I have smiled, cried, worried, and was even scared. Here I felt each one of these emotions and more. I felt grateful I have never had to experience the events that has inspired this exhibit. But I am also completely surrounded by the calamity of our demo cracy!!!

Being in an exhibit that showcases raw and true events that happened to seemingly innocent people is absolutely gut wrenching. Sometimes it is shocking to see and hear what humans are truly capable of. Thank you for sharing this indescribable journey.

Came here the first time and I got freaked out but on my way home, I kept thinking of how much I wanted to come back.
This is the second time I come and the fear is still there.

This was truly amazing, It was disturbing, but in a good way because it sheds light on how society is and how even the innocent have faults + that no human being is perfect, (happiness, love, compassion is a part of us, but so is (evil, malice + greed etc
